

Cybersecurity Corner

Back to school is a great time to discuss good online habits with your family. Rather than just telling kids what they should or shouldn't do, consider making it a parents versus kids challenge. Find out who in your house knows more about protecting their personal information online — and bring in a little healthy competition. While parental controls can help with some things, there's no substitute for talking with kids about rules and expectations.

To craft your challenge's questions and tasks, start with ftc.gov/kidsonline. Below is one idea to get you started:

- Setting your family's cell phone rules. Start an ongoing list of personal information that should not be shared in group chats or posted online (and why). Keep the list in a high traffic area and add to it. Set a timer to see who can share a screenshot of a phishing text message the fastest. Bonus points if you can spot at least two signs of a scam.
